T37. STATISTICS BUREAU

[By act of Feb. 10, 1820, the Secretary of the Treasury was requested to prepare annually for Congress statistical accounts of commerce of United States with foreign countries. As, prior to 1820, such work had been done by the Register of the Treasury, he was called upon by the Secretary to make the required report, and the following year compiled the statement on commerce and navigation for 1821, which is the first of the long series of statistical reports listed below (T. 7.1.). The work was continued in the office of the Register for many years and increased in scope and importance until the Statistics Bureau was created by act approved July 28, 1866. The Statistics Bureau was consolidated with Foreign Commerce Bureau of State Department and transferred to Commerce and Labor Department, July 1, 1903; see C14.]

[As the commerce of the country has increased, these statistical reports have grown from octavo to bulky quarto volumes. For 1866-76, a brief annual report of the director with usually some condensed statistical matter is found also in annual reports of Treasury Department (Finance reports, T1.1.).

Until 1850, there is no edition without Congressional document number.
